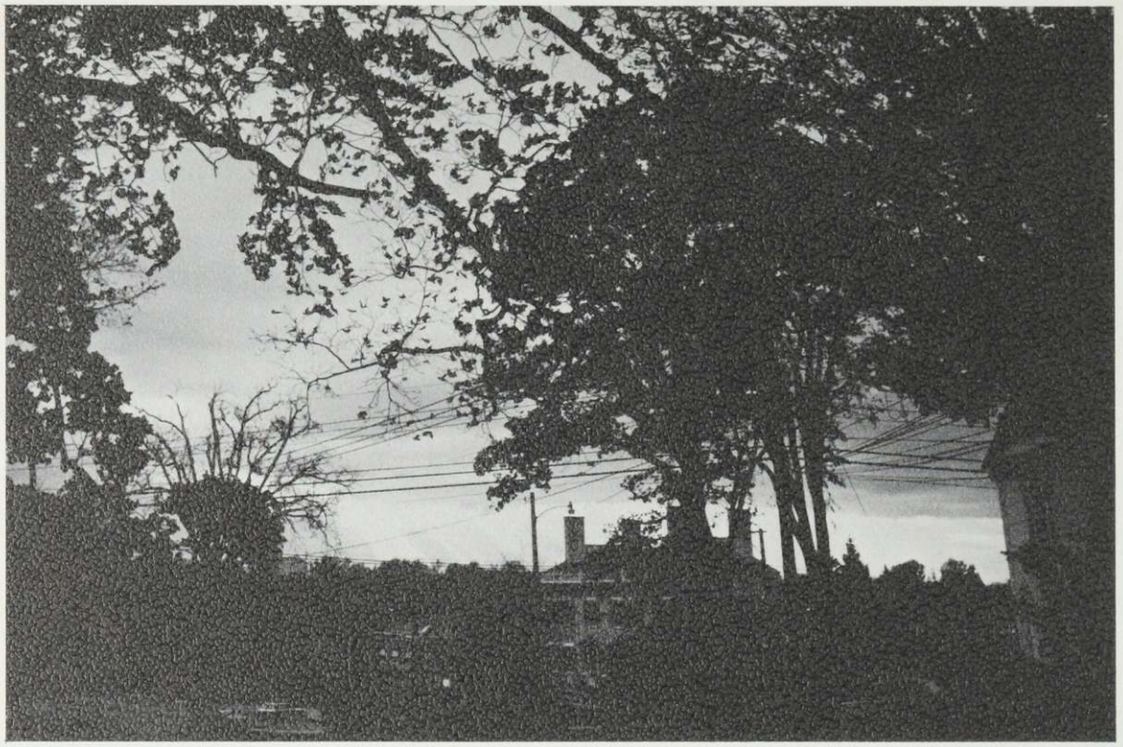
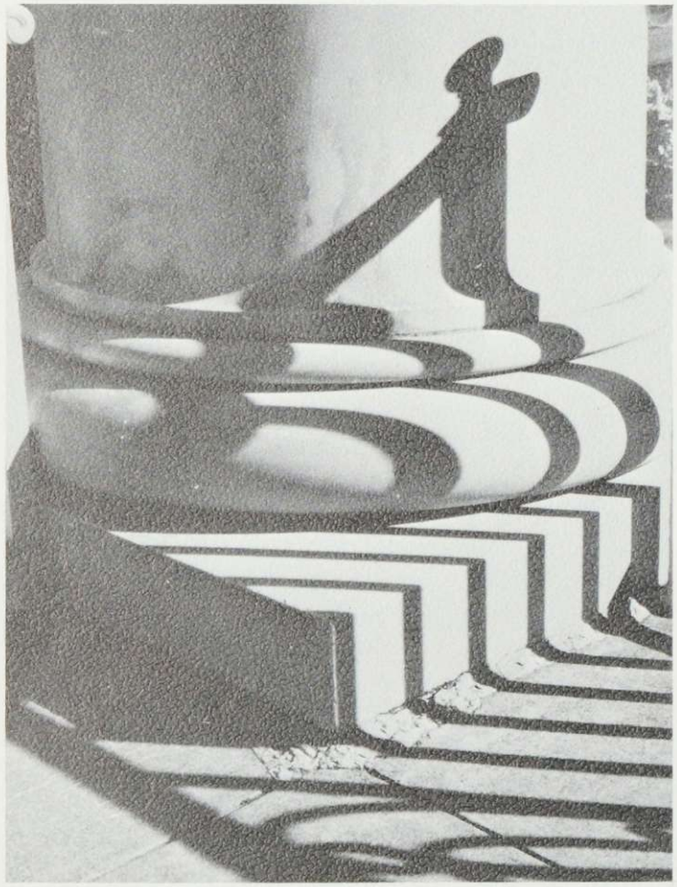
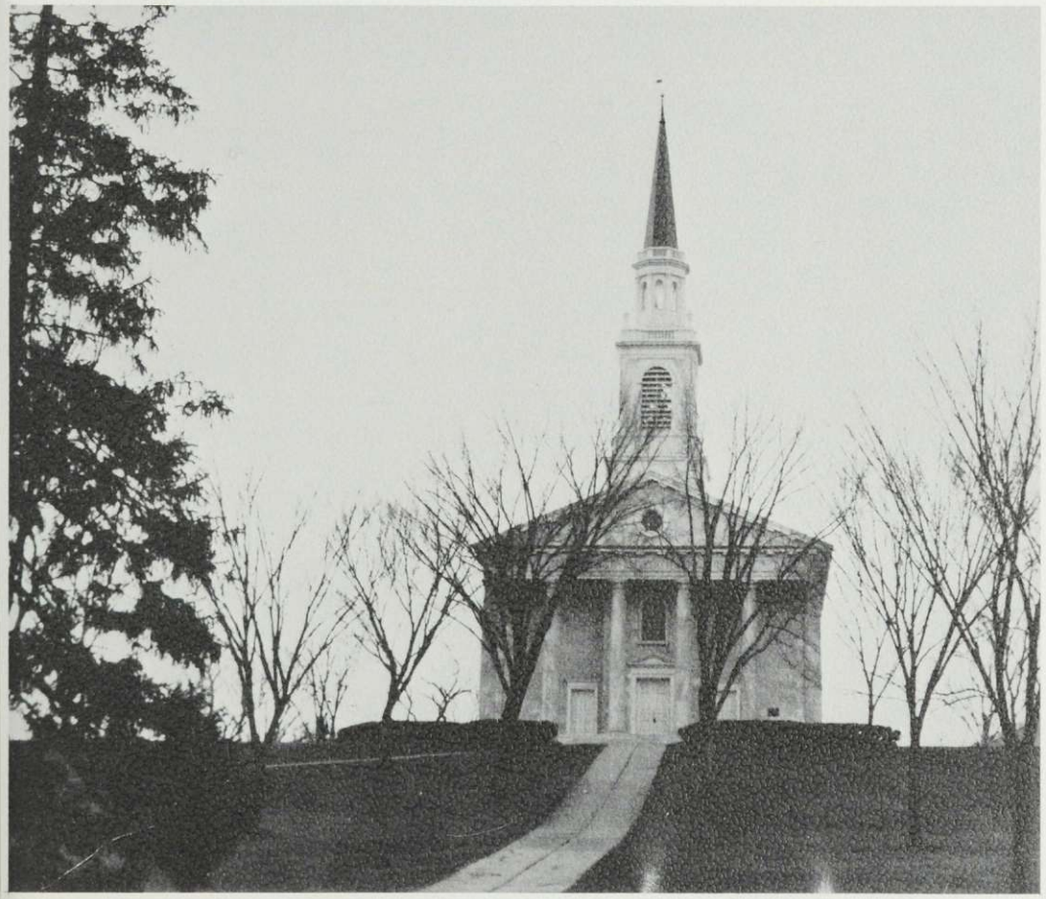
STUDENT LIFE



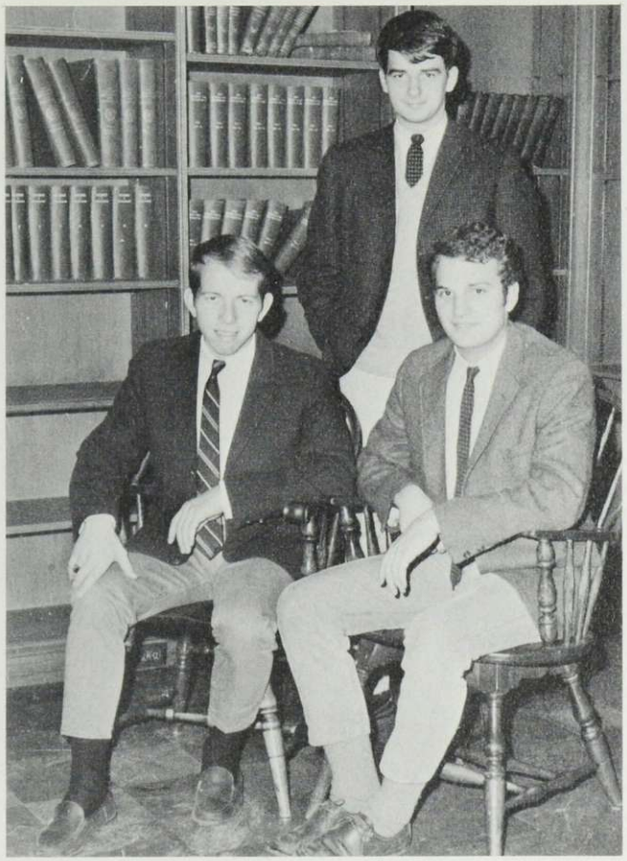


KALEIDOSCOPE 1967 has written a number of outstanding American citizens connected with a variety of professions, interests and talents, asking them to contribute their thoughts on the subject of our theme borrowed from Marcel Proust, "Remembrance of Things Past." The following words, then, are composed especially for the students of Middlebury College and dedicated to the Class of 1967 as their commencement of a memory of things past.



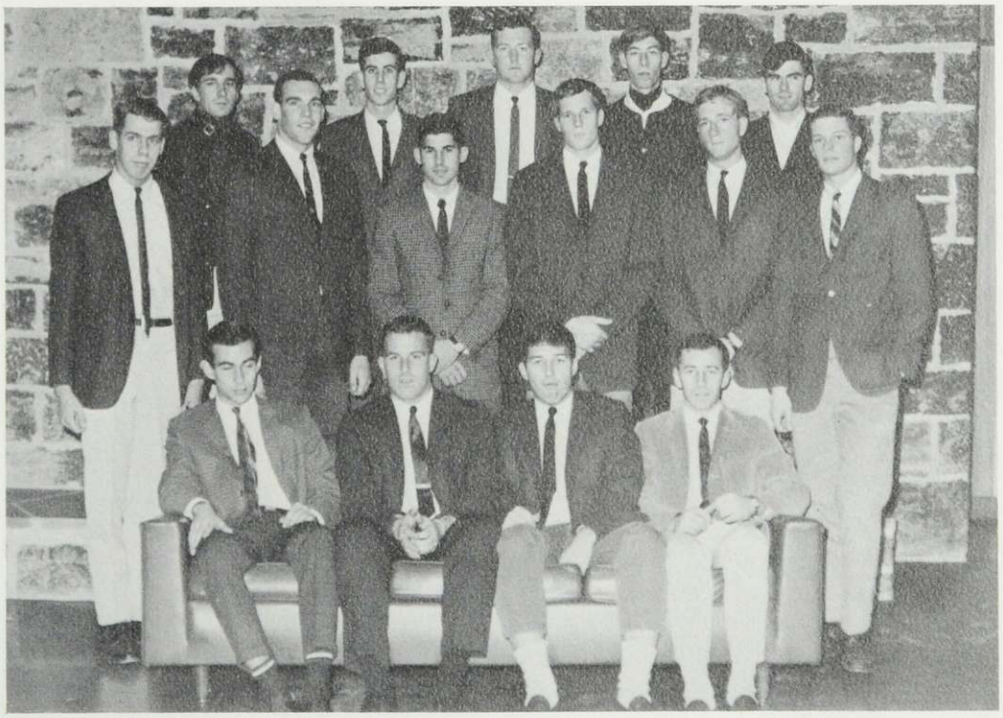
MORTAR BOARD—H. Martin, President D. Tunnicliff, A. Beinert, J. Viehdorfer. Missing: C. Deering.

JUNIOR COUNSELORS—Row 1: B. Faelten, T. Gray, A. Masotti, R. Hamblen, J. Waltermire. Row 2: L. Mason, W. Olinder, B. McElvein, K. Mason, M. Manchester. Row 3: S. Brown, S. Johnson, C. Krieble, B. Zuck, M. Leffler, L. Wright, W. Spillane, J. Goodrich. Missing: A. Arnot, M. Hubbard.



WAUBENAUKEE—J. Rogers, R. Hawley, S. Bicknell.

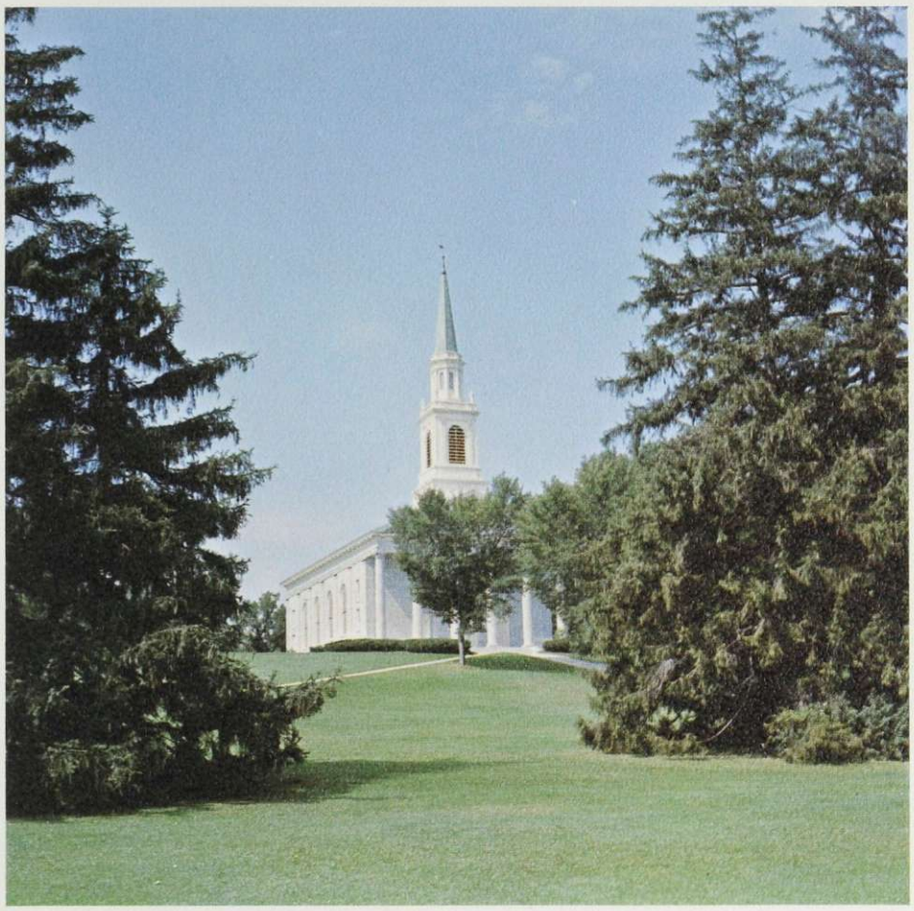
BLUE KEY—Seated: D. Smith, A. Lindsey, P. Thaxter, President S. Bicknell, R. Hawley. Standing: J. Morton, G. Hinman, G. Sidoti, T. Sheldon, P. Brown, G. Margolis.



JUNIOR FELLOWS—Seated: D. Ruberg, S. Conn, A. Lindsey, S. Limon. Row 2: C. Wiley, S. Darling, J. Morton, T. Morse, J. Riotte, S. Orndorf. Row 3: D. Curry, D. Horovitz, J. O'Malley, B. Graham, N. Shetter.

"Vermont is honored to have Middlebury College within its boundaries. Middlebury's standards of excellence have long been a source of inspiration to me and many others working to strengthen the dimensions of quality in the educational programs available to all Vermonters."

Governor Philip H. Hoff



"No period of my life has proved more stimulating, rewarding or pleasant than my own years as an undergraduate at Middlebury."

Congressman Robert T. Stafford

"As a student in Tours, France before World War II, I spent much time alone in the country house once occupied by Balzac. Even then I was obsessed by the distractions of living as they affected a man's ability to work. Balzac, with his immense creative output, had solved that problem. Indeed, every great creative genius had somehow solved it by finding the time in which to work and reflect without undue distractions. An almost limitless creative flow sprang from the clarity of time surrounding Balzac, time cleansed of newspapers, radio, TV or even visitors.

"This fragmentation of time's clarity by thousands of distracting sights, sounds and activities in contemporary life has seemed to me one of our chief problems. Too often it causes us to fritter our lives in busy wastefulness. Ever since experiencing it as a youth in the Balzac house, I have tried to reproduce that same sparseness of distractions in my own."

John Howard Griffin

"A creative person like Proust, having had a rich, surcharged youth but finding life later not to come up to the past, sealed himself in a cork-lined room literally to drown out the present and by silence to let in the past through a delicate psyche. The past became as real as any present. He had the unique power to recreate it in long, painful work.

We have heard much of existentialism in our time, people living from moment to moment. I suppose it comes down to temperament. Others live in the past by imagination and memory. Most people, no doubt, live to various extents in both realms."

Richard Eberhart

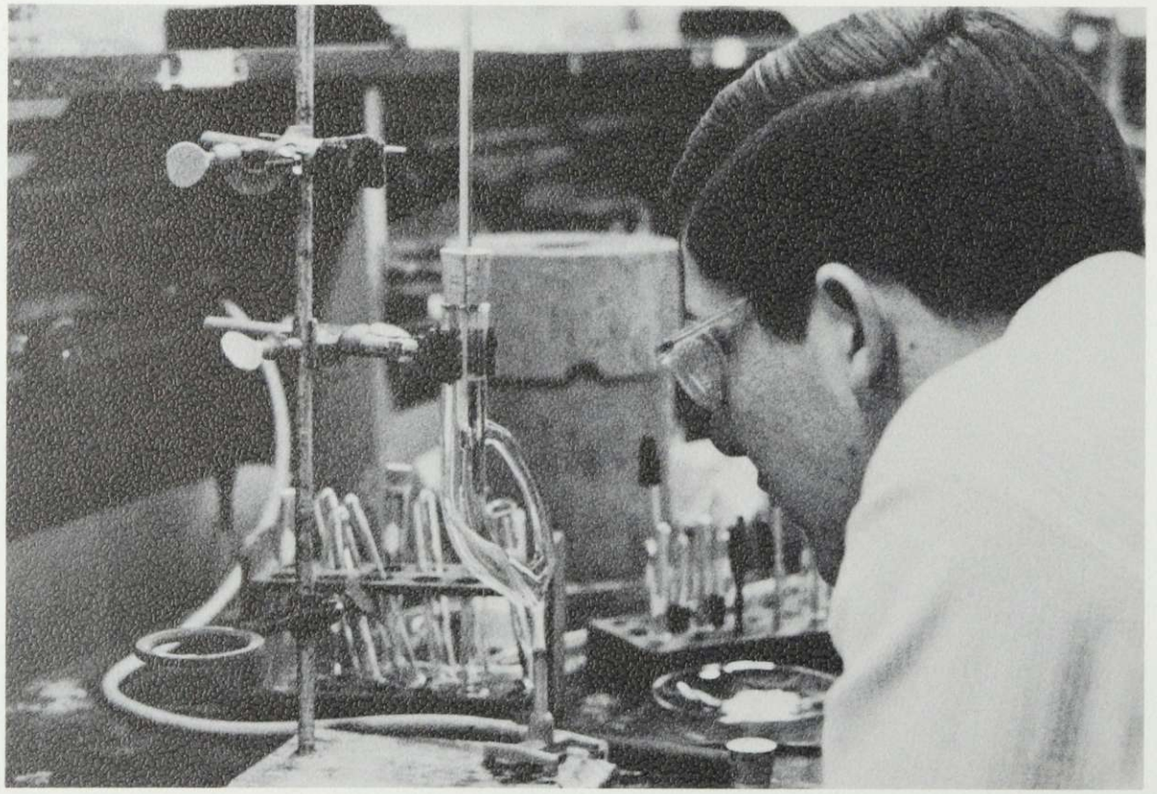
DELTA TAU OMEGA

DTO is located at 99 S. Main St., a pleasant white frame house in the charming college town of Middlebury, nestled in a valley of bursting colors between the massive Adirondacks and verdant, rolling Green Mountains. A citadel of academia that reflects the excellence, the achievements, the grandeur of the graduates of this fine intellectual community, and producing such paragons of humanity as: Van Hole, Terdysson, Herby, M'Duke, Lillienpubes, "Skip" Town, The Walkin' H-O, Vulture, V.D., Broadloom, Turtleman, Sagor, ADHoc, Bull Sessions, Mack the Finger, L'il Arnie, Good Ole Alex, Buffalo Bob, Weeyams, "Eggs" Benedict, "Shepherd's" Pie, Brick Whall, Word Salad, and Roy Rubin.



". . . A man's life is divided into two parts: there is his work and there is his own private life. Two small worlds which he has to make for himself. And it is only when he is old, and the time for decision is over, that he may realize he did not need to neglect one for the other. For if he concentrated too much on one of them, then he really confused their purpose. He had thought that either a successful career was life, or life itself was a career. He hadn't realized that his work and his own private life should be given the same amount of thought, that they should grow along with each other, each influencing the other, each developing the other. Without that balance, he will find himself an incomplete man. That's the tragic thing about age: to realize you have somehow never seen what is happiness until it was too late to start building it up. For it has to be built. Pleasure is a simple thing: you can choose it, buy it, even have it as a gift. But happiness is much more complicated: you have got to build it for yourself."

"Something that happened on my last visit to Middlebury has a sort of silly and bemused relevance. My wife and I were being shown around recent campus developments. We had just come from lunch at the Inn, where there was a picture of Robert Frost; now we were going from one college building with a picture of Robert Frost to another college building with a picture of Robert Frost, and on the way we passed the tennis courts. By association I remembered Frost's having said that writing free verse was like playing tennis with the net down (and remembered, too, a young poet's having said to me about this, 'What the hell does he think poetry is, some kind of game?'). Well, a while later, coming out after my reading, we passed the tennis courts again, and there were a couple of students playing tennis with the net down. It goes to show, I thought, though I don't know just what it goes to show; if there isn't a proverb, there ought to be.

"All I mean to say is that incidents of that kind have something of the charm of small revelations, of metaphors. They double the linkages uniting distant areas, and that in itself is poetic, it is the feeling of thought where thought begins. Also, there are many more things of that kind than there are generally supposed to be; as Proust suggests in his not altogether different context, it is a matter not of the things themselves but of the quality of attention, or receptivity, one brings to them. Likeness, in space; coincidence, in time, these are parallel and akin. The current fashion in world-vision has us perhaps too exclusively preoccupied with relations of cause and category, which means that we are exclusively preoccupied with abstracting. So all too often we see, and colleges encourage us to see, an abstract or spectral world of specialized relationships, and I believe it is so, as William Blake said in such a number of different ways, you become what you behold.

"That may be a solemn moral indeed to work up from so slight an instance. But it attaches to another poetical instruction, which one gets, I think, from Proust and Freud equally, as well as from Blake: when you look at things in the world, listen to what they say and believe they mean literally what they say. Don't listen exclusively to all those people who tell you what the things mean, listen to what the things themselves say when they tell you their names. So cryptic an instruction deserves to be left without example, so that only those that have ears may hear."

"I began my college career at the start of the Second World War. At the opening ceremonies an Under-Secretary of War told us that we were living our college careers 'on borrowed time.' Something has struck me since then: to live authentically we ought to realize that, in an important sense, all of our time is 'borrowed.'

"I realized in college the importance of learning to use the tools of the trade I hoped to follow. I participated in debate and in doing so I learned how to speak. I participated in student body elections and ran for office. That election contest was significant to me in that it foreshadowed in miniature what has come to pass, time after time since, during my career.

The key in preparing for public service was a willingness to take a positive stand based upon factual analysis of the issues. Then, fortified by intelligent argumentation, stressing rational factors as opposed to emotional factors, I awaited the decision with confidence. This approach may not always win popularity contests, but it provides the foundations upon which a reputation for integrity can be built. That reputation and its solid foundation are the best, and really only, offerings that can be given an electorate by a candidate. It is the sound metal which rings when thrown on the table as opposed to the thud that is heard when debased metal is proffered."

"It was my mother who first recognized my 'special' talent, and encouraged me to develop it, kindly but persistently. She not only loved me, but she had respect for life, and for my life, even when I was very young. She insisted that all her children's talents, of whatever nature, be developed through God, and for good. So as I grew and matured from the fledgeling state, both physically and psychically, I remembered her admonition that we, her children, did not 'belong' to her, but to God, and should use any 'Gifts' He had given us for His purposes and for good on this earth. And although my unique, God-given talent is not a 'thing past,' it might never have been developed for humanity's purposes if it had not been for my loving, extraordinary mother, who, if not actually phychic herself, at least possessed the keen perception to recognize my psychic, God-given talent."

"I have never encountered a more courteous and generous reception than during my visit to Middlebury College last March. It brought home to me vividly how much the speaker's performance depends upon his audience and how, in turn, the receptivity of that audience may enhance its own perceptions and insights. Only in this way can the continuity of thought between the generations be maintained through periods of drastic social change and self-examination. My experience at Middlebury did much to renew my faith in young America."

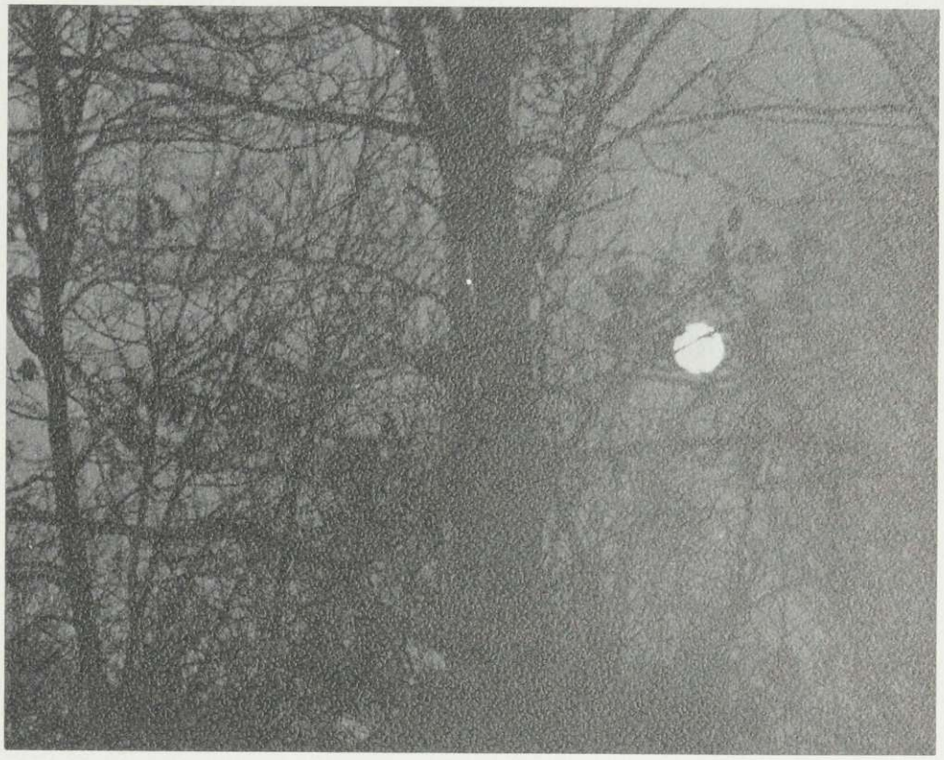
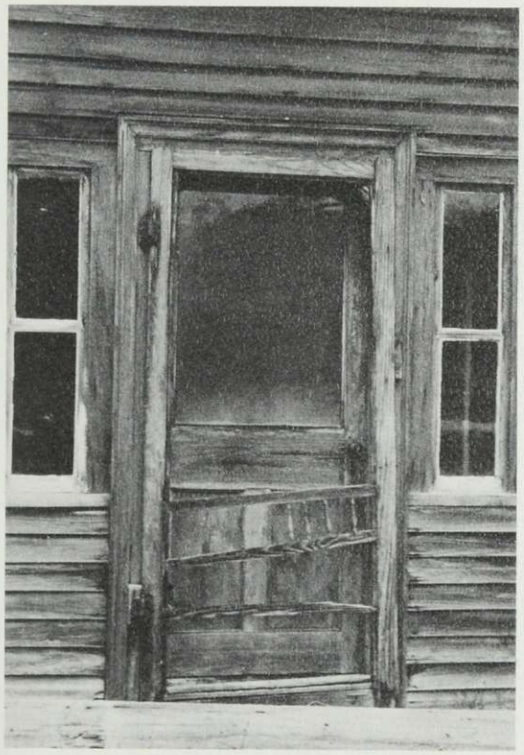
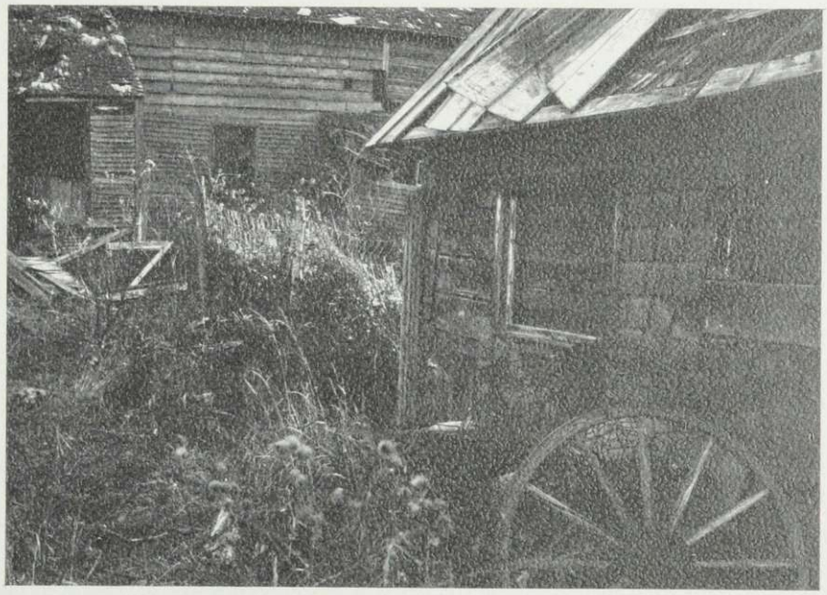
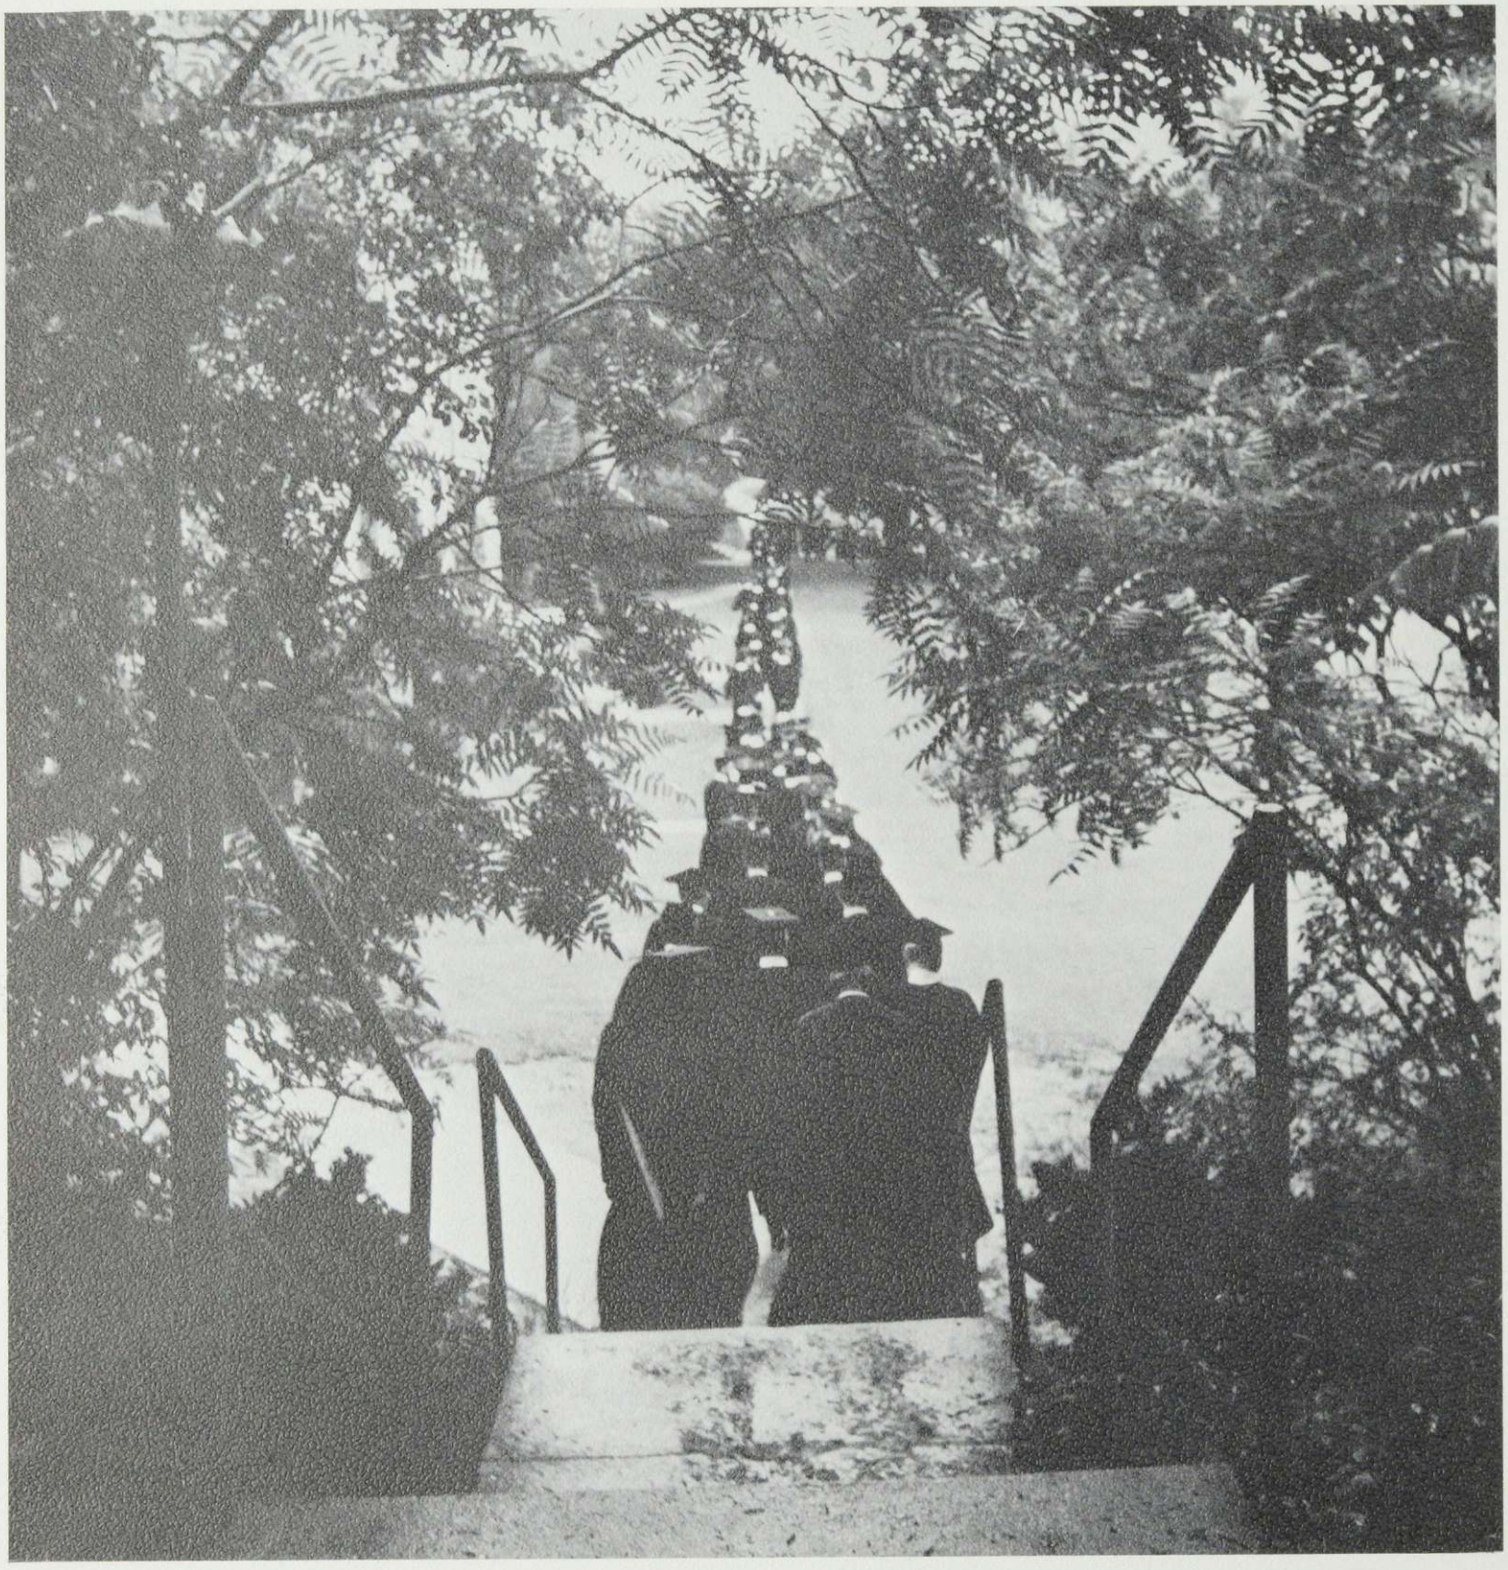
"I've pretty well packed away my 'remembrance of things past.' "

John Dos Passos



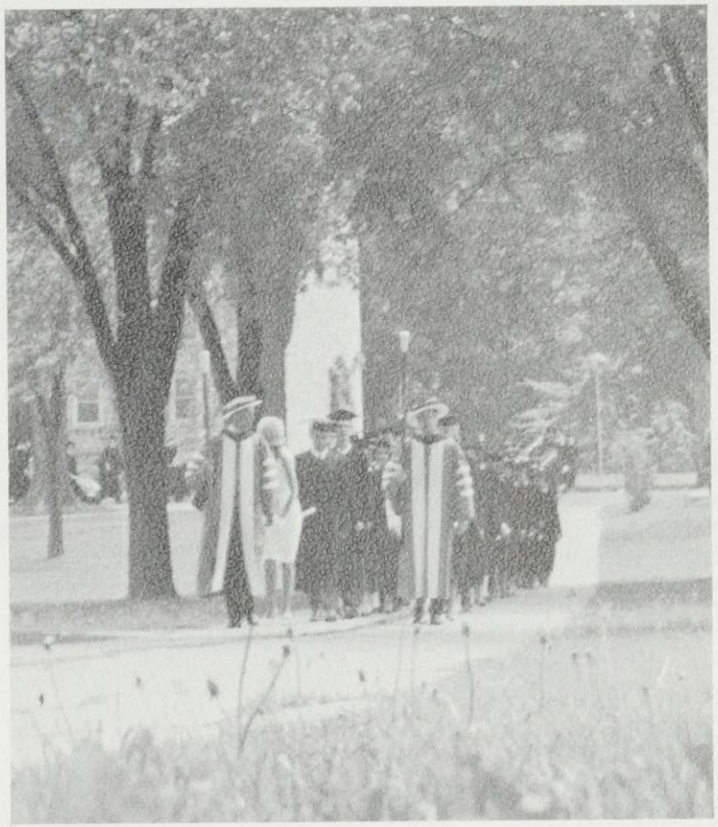






"I do recall Middlebury with real affection because it was there that I received an honorary degree. I felt very honored and excited, but the main thing I remember is that my academic cap, due to the fact that it was too small and there was a wind blowing, blew off just as I was accepting my degree and shaking hands with the President."

Norman Rockwell



"Nothing is more inflationary than to be asked for advice. Nothing will sooner change a man into a blimp. I don't like the thought of changing into a blimp, but let me risk two homilies toward inflation.

First, the most expensive thing in any man's life is freedom. It is emotionally expensive and it is money expensive. Sooner or later a man has to decide whether or not he is willing to pay for it. If he decides it is too expensive, he is then caged in by safety, and is ready to take almost anyone's advice. But is he worth giving advice to? If he decides to buy it, no matter what it costs, he is free of the need for anyone else's advice. He has insisted on making and taking his own, and bless him.

Second, a piece of advice. If a man has chosen safety it won't do him any good, and if he has chosen freedom he doesn't need it. At that time in which a man is screwing his psyche to the sticking place of hard decision, however, it may help a bit. Decide what you would really like to do if you didn't have a living to make, and then see if you can't manage, somehow, to make your living at it. The status symbols may confuse a man's choice at times, but don't be misled by them. If a man sits in a brokerage office all week just waiting for a chance to play golf, he might have done better in the first place to work at improving his game with the idea of turning pro. He will probably make more money in the brokerage office, but he would have been doing more of what he really wants to do out on the course.

But all advice is stupid, and enough of that. What I remember of things past is an avid improvidence. My only thought was to arrange a few free months for writing. What followed never mattered much. I'd take a job and pinch pennies until I could manage to get free again to use up my freedom. When it was gone, I had to find a new job, but never with the thought that it would lead anywhere. The job was just a way of saving up another few months or a year in which I could support myself working for myself. That's impractical, of course, but weigh all things in and it may be impractical to risk letting yourself be born. It may be practical, but it certainly is absurd to throw away any of your borning time cramped up and shut away from what you really want to be doing."

John Ciardi
